“I have learned how much easier it is to connect with native Spanish speakers when they see someone like me trying to connect with them through their first language.”

Andrew Blanford is a WKU undergraduate Spanish student planning to graduate in 2024. After graduation, he hopes to work in supply chains between the U.S. and Spanish speaking countries, specifically in Central America, South America, and/or Spain. In addition to his Spanish major, Andrew is pursuing a Bachelor of Science in International Business. He is also involved on campus and in the surrounding community as a member of Phi Gamma Delta.

Andrew has experienced first-hand the benefits of studying a foreign language, both in business and personally. He says, “I have learned how much easier it is to connect with native Spanish speakers when they see me trying to connect with them through their first language.” He highly encourages students to “study abroad and don’t be afraid to make mistakes while speaking.” Andrew will be studying abroad in Segovia, Spain this summer with the KIIS program.
